

Kiwanis Club honors Preston Nunnelley

gavel!

The Spiritual Aims Award is given each year by the Kiwanis Club to a recipient who demonstrates that special spirit and to one who has made a difference in our community by the lives they have led and by the many lives they have touched. Preston Nunnelley belongs in that class of spiritual leaders who has served his church faithfully and who, with his graceful manner, is a true example of a kind and humble Christian.

Preston Nunnelley resides in Mt. Vernon where he has lived for most of his life. He was married to the late Geraldine Fairchild and has three children: Dr. Preston Nunnelley, Jr. of Lexington, Jim Barton Nunnelley of Austin, Texas and Jerri Lynn Smith of Mt. Vernon. He has eight grandchildren and six great grandchildren. He is retired from the Bluegrass Army Depot and has taught Sunday School at First Baptist Church and been a Deacon there for over fifty years.

Cheyenne Carmack, who is a member of the Fellowship of Christian Athletes at RCHS, gave a wonderful talk on prayer at the Kiwanis Prayer Luncheon at the Kastle Inn Thursday.

To Get What You Want, Ask For What You Want

"I am tired of being ignored and neglected," Vera said loudly. "I want out of my marriage." (All characters are fictitious.) "I do all the child care," she continued. "He doesn't help with cooking or cleaning or laundry."

He never takes me out to dinner anymore, and he never just hugs me. His hugs always lead to something else."

Sam and Vera's twelve-year marriage was in jeopardy. Vera had insisted that they come for counseling and Sam had reluctantly come along. "I didn't even know we had a problem," Sam told me. "And all of a sudden Vera wants a divorce! I was shocked."

"You shouldn't be surprised," Vera told him. "I've been telling you all along that I was unhappy."

"You never told me any such thing!" Sam defended himself.

"Vera," I interrupted, "how have you told Sam that you were unhappy?"

"He should have noticed that I wasn't as talkative and cheerful as I used to be," she replied, "and that I've been spending more time by myself."

"But you never really said to him that you weren't happy?" I asked.

After a pause she replied, "Well, no. He should have known!"

Vera was very adamant about this. "He should have known that I was unhappy and asked me what was wrong," she added. "If he really loved me like he says, then I wouldn't have to ask him for anything; he would just know it."

If I have to ask him to help, then his help doesn't mean as much as if he did it on his own."

"How is he supposed to know that you are unhappy?" I asked.

"He just is!" Vera added.

Vera was assuming that Sam could read her mind. Couples make many assumptions during marriage, at least half of which are wrong. "So you believe that Sam can read your mind?" I inquired gently.

"No! Yes! Oh, I don't know," Vera said dejectedly.

Sam said the right thing at this point. "Honey, I do love you," he said softly, "and if I had known that you were so unhappy, I would have tried to help. I had no idea you felt this way."

Vera looked at Sam as if she had just discovered the law of gravity. "You mean you really haven't known that I was mad at you for the last three years?" Boy, you men are dense!

Sam also made the right response here: he laughed. "I guess I am dense, honey. You have to ask for what you want when you're dealing with me," he replied.

"Asking for what you want is a good idea no matter with whom you are dealing," I suggested to Vera. "Most of the people we deal with are not mind readers. How did you come to believe that men should read minds? Did your mother believe that?"

"Maybe she did," Vera acknowledged. "She never said anything to Dad about her wants. Dad always told us not to whine. He hated whiners."

"Asking for what you want would have been whining according to Dad?" I asked.

"Exactly," Vera agreed. "Therefore no one at our house ever asked for anything. I think Mom is a lonely person, but she never talks about it. Dad would talk that whining."

"I'm not your father," Sam reminded her. "I would like it if you would tell me when you are unhappy, and I will try to help." Again Vera looked at Off as if she had just discovered the law of gravity. She was amazed!
