Our Readers Write

Dear Editor:

I, like many other residents, am growing restless and tired of the current rampage of stealing and robbing in our county and local area. Also, I am disturbed by the rampant willingness on the part of law enforcement, news media, insurance companies and people in general to accept these acts as "things that we can't do anything about."

I believe that we property owners are not as responsible as we could or ought to be. I am suggesting that we all consider these following practices.

1. Start now! Make a list of all the serial numbers of equipment and major items.

2. Cooperate with all neighbors as a watch and informing committee.

3. Install a security system, whenever possible. Some aren't expensive.

4. Encourage and expect all the aforementioned organizations to consider and possibly rearrange their priorities, and last but not least as one police officer advised me:

5. "Get Yourself a Good Shotgun."

Thanks for your help,

Dear Editor:

I'd like to let the people of Rockcastle County know the kind of people we have to deal with when buying heating gas from Parsons Gas. We've had "gas" with Parsons for around twenty years. Recently they came while we were gone to work and took our tank because they said we owed money for the tank sitting on our property. For a bill of less than $40 which we told them to add to our bill when the tank was filled. But they didn't bother to do anything when our tank leaked for a week. They were called twice to come out to fix the leak the smell of gas leaking for a week almost made everybody sick. I don't mention the danger of exploding. If they had bothered to call and tell us we would have paid the bill. All I know is they are not the only people who sell gas!

"Sweet 'n' Sour"

their new playmate. They liked and gently nuzzled him all over before going back to their place close to Rod's chair, and I was told, now they will watch over him. I don't know if that introduction did it or if Birch inherited the love of animals from his parents, but he has always been a lover of dogs and protector of all animals. Rod and Helen raised Siberian Huskies and they are beautiful, gentle animals.

Now, this third grandchild was different from the others in many ways - who would want two alike anyway? He had light brown hair that soon was a curly mop, medium complexion, blue grey eyes with a twinkle in them and a nose as big as his dad's. A cute little nose like his mom and the rest of him was just sweet baby boy. That twinkle in his eyes, the things he said and did ahead and it told it right. The way he was fun. Mat loved him and his ability to make people laugh so when Birch was around, a lot of his time was spent in Mat's bedroom telling him all the latest ones. But, fun was more than telling jokes, he made fun out of doing things the watering the garden and lawns. Once while doing this, he suddenly turned the hose on me while I was scrubbing the front porch and before I knew what had hit me, I was drenched to the skin and Birch along with Chad were disappearing around the corner of the house, squealing with glee, then quickly appeared again, doubled up with laughter, so was I. He simply made things fun to do. He did have a problem though. If he got within a mile of poison ivy, he would be broken out from head to foot in seconds. That took the fun out of visiting on the farm and I did not know what to do for it. I had dealt with the same problem with Rodney all his life and never found a cure.

When Birch was 8 or 9, they moved to West Virginia, close to his other grandparents so I didn't have the chance to see him very often. There he was busy with 4H, work, summer camp and his music practice. He had fallen in love with the saxophone and was determined to excel in it. He did and was the soloist in every concert the band was in. I tried to be at every band concert but he had a part in and every cattle show where he was showing one of his prize heifers. Once Bevise Cromer and I were visiting there during the State Fair and helped Birch dress one of his prize heifers for the Pretties Cow Contest. What about it? He got second place. We all had a ball. When graduation time came, I was always there, high school, college and his saxophone recital, or in plain words, what any grandchild would have an interest in, I supported it. His saxophone recital was wonderful and the standing ovation he received was well deserved.

Now that each grandchild has been recognized as a very special individual in my life, let's take a look at them as such. From different backgrounds with sibling parents who were raised together, fused at one another together, ate at the same table, taught the same manners, and see how they handled it. Mat and I welcomed each one into our lives with warm arms and a heart full of love ready to be poured out to each when he appeared on the scene. So, when they were together, it was as if we had reared them ourselves. From the time Denny first reached out to hold Ann, then they both reached for Chad, now all three wanted to see and hold this littlest one. Birch, they were like siblings, greeting the new in line. They could teach him the tricks of being a good boy in grandma's sight, a good sport in grandma's eye and one to play with, hike over the hills with, tell of the good and the bad things that you had experienced in their short life on the farm. They loved this little guy because they had even met him. Then, as he grew big enough to do the things they had planned, they seemed to enjoy him even more. He proved to be the missing link needed to complete the family and create a friendship that would last a lifetime. They all went to different colleges but, when break time came, they usually headed for Grandma's house.

When Chad and Angie got married at the First Baptist Church, Birch came from North Carolina, Ann from Florida and Denny from California to attend. When Denny got married in California last year, they were all there. Ann and Birch are still looking. Needless to say, I AM PROUD TO THEM.

Hugs from Grandma have been lavished thoughtfully on grandchildren. Now, let's see how she would like to enjoy a few when her time comes to put away her car keys and cook book, slip her glasses off when her eyelids become heavy and kick her shoes off when they become too uncomfortable.
