County Attorney Reynolds appoints new detective

By: Doug Ponder
Rockcastle County Attorney Billy Reynolds recently appointed a county detective to work with him at his office.

William "Bo" Harris, 35, of London was sworn in as a Rockcastle County Detective last Monday by District Judge Katie Wood.

Harris began his law enforcement career in 1990 as a police officer for the City of Brodhead for two years before moving to the Rockcastle County Sheriff's Department as a deputy sheriff for three years.

In 1995, Harris went on to work as a detective with the UNITE Drug Task Force for four years before spending the last four years working as a deputy sheriff for the Laurel County Sheriff's Department.

As county detective, Harris will work with prosecutors in preparing court cases and trials associated with the county attorney's office. He will also assist local and state police agencies in obtaining arrest and search warrants as well as making arrests on wanted persons for the county attorney's office.

Harris said that he is honored and excited about the opportunity to serve as a county detective with the Rockcastle County Attorney's Office.

"I spent most of my law enforcement career in Rockcastle County and I have always loved this area," Harris said. "It's exciting to come back to the place where I started and I look forward to serving the county in my position."
